However, if you do fall in this situation and your insurer does not respond to you, you should be aware of the no-fault laws that govern the minimum basic no fault insurance that you are legally required to have. Basic no-fault requires car owners to carry $25,000 of liability insurance for their vehicle for the minimum. This is because the car is not a "passenger vehicle" under the no-fault insurance and it is not considered a "motor vehicle," which you need at least $5,000 of liability coverage for. Basic no-fault insurance is mandatory in the state of Michigan and if you do not have it, you could be subject to fines and even have your license suspended or revoked. Some states like Arizona require all insurance providers to carry a minimum $15,000 of liability insurance. The minimum amount of liability insurance you need to be fully covered should be determined by an attorney who specializes in personal injury law in your state. Visit our Michigan personal injury law page for more information. Robert S. O'Malley 82138339de
