Q: How can I get a custom error to happen when a key is in a list? The following code demonstrates the normal flow of checking a key value and wrapping it in an error if the key is in a list.

`map[list[int]] = [key, "foo"]` The following code does not properly identify the list containing the key. `map[list[int]] = [key, "foo"]`

`map = { } for i in [1, 2, 3]: k, v = i, "foo"`
`map[i] = (k, v) print "inverted dict"`
`in map print "hash dict" in map` How can I get it to match the hash dict format? A: Convert the key, item tuple to a single value, using tuple unpacking (and a list comprehension): `map[key] = ("foo",) + [item for item in map.items() if item[1] == key]` Blood parasite antigens of the dog. Unlike ectoparasites such as ticks, fleas, and lice, blood parasites such as trypanosomes and schistosomes do not influence the selection of host species through host-parasite coevolution. The spectrum of their hosts is therefore narrower than that of the above parasites. All four major classes of blood parasites in domestic dogs may occur in at least one species of wild canids, particularly golden jackals, in Africa. Not only do these parasites infect humans, but recently a new species of trypanosome has been discovered in bats of the genus Molossus.

More exciting is the finding of a trypanosome of the genus Cowanomyces in ants of the genus Formica, from which parasitic trypanosomes previously had been isolated only from reptiles. Video 02P -
